Description :

Prsentation de l'diteurYou never know whos watching.Bank Holiday weekend. Beatrice Stubbs takes some holiday snaps on a secluded Welsh beach. Innocent pictures reveal rather more than cliffs and seagulls, and someone wants them destroyed. But Beatrice has other things on her mind.Assigned to the London Transport Police, shes pursuing the Finsbury Park Flasher, trying to pre-empt a serious sexual offence. Meanwhile, neighbour Adrian and companion Matthew decide to play Poirot, and investigate the mystery of the disappearing photographs. Amateur detectives and professional criminals are a dangerous mix. From deserted Pembrokeshire beaches, through the shadowy underpasses of North London, to the remote Irish countryside, Beatrice discovers the darker side of human nature.... what starts out as a light-hearted caper turns into something horribly grim. The truth is more terrible than anyone imagined and the final chapters are heart-stoppingly moving and exciting. Chris Curran, author of Mindsight Raw Material is an excellent crime novel full of humour and horrors. I was hooked from start to finish by the plot, the rising tension and looming menace, and the many-faceted personalities--even minor characters leap off the page. Helle, er"

The Beatrice Stubbs European crime series takes us to many exotic locations. But this is closer to home - too close for comfort." - Darksider, book blogger
